- Business Development for Social Sciences and Humanities -

About the course:

After previous successes, AESIS proudly announces the third edition of the Oxford Course, held virtually this year. This ambitious course will feature leading experts involved with the Social Sciences and Humanities (SSH) who will demonstrate how to advance societal impact of SSH through business development. Themes covered in this course include:

- ◆ Making academic ideas 'market-ready'
- ◆ Organizing public and private alliances
- ◆ Setting up services such as consultancies
- ◆ Integrating impact in research strategy

The course will welcome 20-30 participants from around the world, and each session will be taught in an interactive manner and include collective exercises to stimulate discussion. Experts from the UK, US, Canada, and continental Europe will share their expertise on topics such as entrepreneurship, business alliances, consultancy opportunities, and generating awards and grants for research. This course aims to deliver valuable insights and tools that you may use to stimulate SSH impact in your organisation.

Benefits of the course:

- ◆ 7 leading international experts to offer training in an intimate online setting
- ◆ Hands-on exercises offering tools and insights to organising impact structures in your specific organisation
- ◆ Interactive discussions with peers from all over the world and from our companion workshop
- ◆ Certificate signed by the main trainers and AESIS upon course completion

And there is more!

This year's Oxford Course is followed by a companion workshop on Entrepreneurship and Innovation for PhD's and Post-Docs, a workshop aimed at training early career researchers in the skills and knowledge needed for science entrepreneurship and innovation. Participants from the workshop are welcomed as audience members for the final participant presentations of this course, and a tailor-made ticket package is available for colleagues attending the course and workshop respectively.
